

Lysistrata - Illustrated Ancient Greek Dramatic Play (Sexual Power, Peace & War Plays Book 1)

Lysistrata is a play by Aristophanes. It was originally performed in Greece in 411 BC and tells the tale of women using their sexuality to end the Peloponnesian War. Lysistrata convinces the women of Greece to withhold their sexual power from their husbands and partners to negotiate for peace. This strategy creates a battle between the sexes. The play Lysistrata gives us great insight into male / female relations in Ancient Greece (which was a male dominated society). Lysistrata as the protagonist, is a strong and inspiring character. The play is often humorous, the use of language was considered explicit in its time. The foreword to the book below, by Jack Lindsay, shows the importance of Aristophanes play. This is followed by some wonderful quotes from Lysistrata. Foreword: The intellectual and spiritual tendrils of the poem are more truly interwoven, the operation of their centers more nearly unified; and so the work goes deeper into life. It is his greatest play because of this, because it holds an intimate perfume of femininity and gives the finest sense of the charm of a cluster of girls, the sweet sense of their chatter, and the contact of their bodies, that is to be found before Shakespeare, because that mocking gaiety we call Aristophanes reaches here its most positive acclamation of life, vitalizing sex with a deep delight, a rare happiness of the spirit. (Jack Lindsay) Calonice, its more than I can bear, I am hot all over with blushes for our sex. Men say were slippery rogues--.. Yet summoned on the most tremendous business For deliberation, still they snuggle in bed. (Lysistrata) My dear, they'll come. Its hard for women, you know, To get away. Theres so much to do; Husbands to be patted and put in good tempers: Servants to be poked out: children washed Or soothed with lullabys or fed with mouthfuls of pap. (Calonice) Are you not sad your childrens fathers Go endlessly off soldiering afarIn this plodding war? I am willing to wagerTheres not one here whose husband is at home. (Lysistrata)And not the slightest glitter of a lover!And since the Milesians betrayed us, Ive not seenThe image of a single upright manTo be a marble consolation to us.Now will you help me, if I find a meansTo stamp the war out. (Lysistrata)Lewd to the least drop in the tiniest vein,Our sex is fitly food for Tragic Poets,Our whole lifes but a pile of kisses and babies.But, hardy Spartan, if you join with meAll may be righted yet. O help me, help me. (Lysistrata)By the two Goddesses, now cant you seeAll we have to do is idly sit indoorsWith smooth roses powdered on our cheeks,Our bodies burning naked through the foldsOf shining Amorgos silk, and meet the menWith our dear Venus-plats plucked trim and neat.Their stirring love will rise up furiously,Theyll beg our arms to open.

Thats our time!Well disregard their knocking, beat them off--And they will soon be rabid for a Peace.Im sure of it.
