Designers Guide to Girls and Junior Apparel: Instructors Guide

This book explains the process that a fashion designer goes through to put a line togetherspecifically for the girls and junior markets, following a sequence similar to the schedulethat an actual working designer follows when he or she is working on a line for a manufacturer. It starts with the inspiration phase, and then moves to research and sketching. Chapters teach students how the designer works with patternmakers to see the garmentfabricated and sewn, then follows the garment as it is costed, merchandised, and preparedto be sold. Students will be exposed to the many layers of specifications, productionpatterns, and testing, and finally producing and shipping the garments. Each chapterwill conclude with a Designer's Diary in the voice of a fictitious designer, documentingher successes, frustrations, and other experiences intrinsic to the job. Students will alsobe given a chance to create a diary of their own, tracking the progression of their ownchildren s wear collection.
