

Forever and Always

Catherine Rutherford was a success - a self-made woman from the ground up, she had to fight hard for everything she had with only herself to rely on. But she had it all - a great job, a house, friends, a fiance ... well, perhaps not so much in the fiance area. Glen was not quite what she had hoped for in a man. He was nice enough - smart and funny and damned good in bed - but also indecisive and passive and quite happy to let her take care of him. She always yearned for something ... more - much more, and much less politically correct. Enter Mrs. Euphemia Jenkins, who ran a kind of curiosity shop that was full of just the kinds of things that had always attracted Cathy almost helplessly - that was, almost anything from the fifties. And Euphemia was in the habit of giving the people - the ones that she felt deserved it - what they wanted most. That was how a modern, twenty-first century woman found herself on the floor of a bridal salon in the year nineteen-fifty-six, in the arms of a man who looked very much like her fiance, but was tantalizingly different - confident, attentive, loving - and dominant with a capital D. And as she tries to come to grips with where she was and even tries to create a way to get back, Cathy finds herself falling for a man she believes isn't hers to love.
