

Blood and Frost

Life is funny people say one door doesnt close unless another one opens. Im too practical for metaphysical ruminations; I like concrete things, things I can observe and measure, and I dont believe in fate. Correction I DIDNT believe in Fate. How is it you can go through life and not realise you need something desperately and then suddenly wake up to find out its vital to your existence? But Im getting ahead of myself. I wasnt happy but I had made peace with my life, or thought I had. It wasnt perfect, in fact it was a bit of a mess, but it was MY mess. I had a decent job, met interesting people, was starting to make pretty good money, enough money to think about asserting my autonomy once more. Then I took a trip to northern Scotland in the middle of winter to meet a client and it changed everything. HE changed everything. He showed me the shuttered parts of my soul, shone light on my dark, hidden desires and ignited something in me that is terrifying. Even now, there is part of me that he holds captive that no amount of distance or time will ever make free. My name is Lucretia Davison, and this is my journey.
